Finding Speeches or Interviews

Follow these steps to find resources in Discover Local (Catalog):

1. On the Discover Local (Catalog) search page, type your research topic into the first search box.
   - If your research topic is more than one word, separate your search terms with "AND."
   - E.g. depression AND college students

2. Type "speech" or "interview" into the second search box.
3. Click on "Search."
4. When the search results pull up, scroll through the results for something that interests you.
5. In the record's details section, there should be a description that you can use to determine if the resource is the speech or interview you'd want to use for your assignment.

6. Lastly, if you choose to use Discover Local (Catalog) resources, look in the Send to section of the record to find the citation helper for the resource.

<td>About the Stanford Prison Experiment: In the summer of 1971, Philip Zimbardo, Craig Haney, and Curtis Banks conducted a psychological experiment to test a single question: What happens when you put good people in an evil place — does humanity win over evil, or does evil triumph? To explore this question, college student volunteers were randomly assigned to play the role of prisoner or guard in a simulated prison at Stanford University. Although the guards were mentally healthy and knew they were taking part in an experiment, some guards soon became sadistic and the prisoners showed signs of acute stress and depression. After only six days, the planned two-week study was cut short to protect the welfare of the prisoners. This dramatic demonstration of power over social situations is relevant to many institutional settings, such as the Abu Ghraib Prison in Iraq. Quiet Rage is a 90-minute documentary film from the study, as well as a bonus 15-image slide show of archival photographs from the study. The film has been shown to thousands of instructors around the world and is sure to stimulate critical thinking and discussion. Narrated by Philip Zimbardo, the documentary uses original footage, interviews, post-experiment correspondence with prisoners and guards, and comparisons with real atrocities, Philip Zimbardo is Professor Emeritus of Psychology at Stanford University and a renowned expert on social psychology and media/personality, winning numerous awards in each of these areas. He is also former president of the American Psychological Association, host of the PBS television series Discovering Psychology, and author of more than 60 publications. Zimbardo, Philip G., and Musen, Ken. Quiet Rage: The Stanford Prison Experiment / Film by Philip G. Zimbardo. Philip G. Zimbardo and Stanford University, 2004.</td>
